

Opening the door on crime and police information

See overleaf how Conservatives are putting information on crime back in the hands of ordinary people...

Why shouldn't information about crime in our area be available to local people?

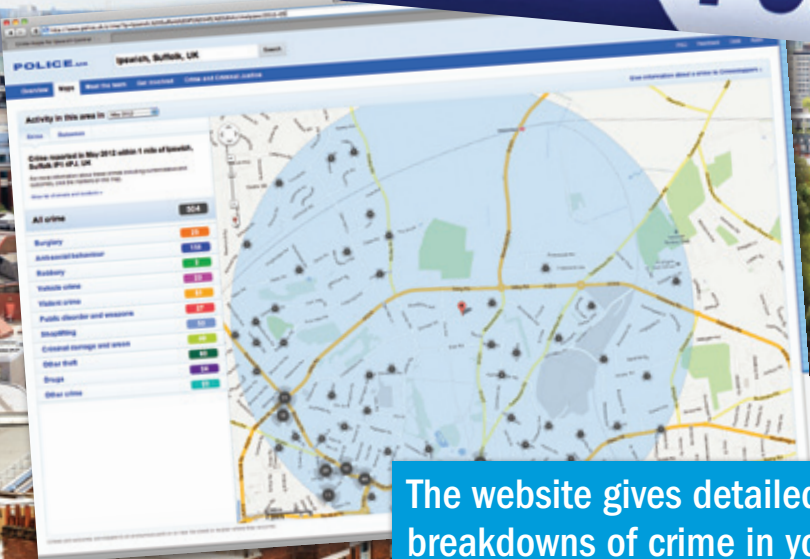

We think it should, that's why Conservatives in Government have launched a website – www.police.uk – which provides maps showing crime and anti-social behaviour at a street-by-street level in your neighbourhood.

This means you can see, even from your mobile, exactly what crime is happening and where. If you have concerns about the crime you see or how issues are dealt with, you can raise them with the police – the details of your neighbourhood policing team are on the same page.

These crime maps, which will reconnect the police and communities through the power of information, are just the start.
